While working its magic, the application will send encrypted files to the intruder's email address as attachment. With an average of 76,000 reports of data breaches in 2015, this year is set to be the year of data breach reports. As new breaches are reported daily, it seems the legislation and compliance departments are still trying to catch up and get ahead of the game. New York City (PRWEB) December 28, 2015 For organizations of all sizes, data breaches and the associated costs of data theft remain the biggest concern for business continuity. According to the 2014 Cost of Data Breach Study by Ponemon Institute, the average cost of a data breach was estimated at $3.86 million. The costs of data breaches are high, but, if caught early, the associated costs can be significantly less. In fact, the average cost for organizations with effective breach detection and prevention, or “breach response,” measures is estimated at $152,000. With this in mind, why not turn your breach response efforts into an opportunity to increase revenue? The knowledge, skills, and competencies for doing so are readily available. In fact, a recent study by Deloitte found that 86% of respondents believe that improving IT security offers them the opportunity to improve revenue, but only 43% of them actually have a program in place to deal with breach detection and prevention. Use this application to verify the connection to the specified TCP/IP server. Sending UDP Packets: To verify the UDP connection to the specified server, use the udp verification tool, which is designed to verify UDP datagram transmission across the Internet. Wireless LAN: You can use this application to verify the connection to the Internet in wireless LAN mode. Open-Source: You can download the source code of the application for personal and/or educational purposes. Description: Packet Sender is a lightweight and portable piece of software that enables users to connect to a port via the Winsock protocol and send text strings, in order to verify the connection. It comes packed with just a few parameters that can be set up immediately. Portability advantages Since there is no installation involved, you can drop the executable file in any part of the hard disk and just click it to run. Another possibility is to save Packet Sender to a USB flash disk or similar storage unit, in order to run it on any PC with minimum effort and no previous installers. More importantly, the app does not create new entries in the Windows registry or Start menu, leaving no traces behind after its removal. Simple interface and options The main app window is small and provides direct access to all available options, so there's nothing more to it aside from what's visible. All you have to do is specify a server IP and port number, and click a button to connect to it. Once the connection is established, you can input a text query and send it just as easily. In addition, you can disconnect from the server and try another one. There are no other noteworthy options available here. Evaluation and conclusion Packet Sender has not been updated for a very long time, but it works smoothly on later operating systems, as revealed in our tests. However, the app was faulty built from the start, since it does not inform users whether the text strings have been successfully sent or not, let alone provide any other details. The developer has mentioned that this is the first and final release of Packet Sender, so users should resort to more reliable apps for testing connections to servers.From the 2013 book Dispatches From a Failed Paradise: An American in Venezuela. Back in 2010, then Secretary of State Hillary Clinton declared, “Cuba’s international isolation has largely come to an end. The United States is Cuba’s largest trading partner and our relations are now relatively normal.” More than four years later, the reality of America’s cozy relationship with the Castro brothers – despite it not living up to the “relatively normal” assertion – is now glaringly obvious
