Big brother has come to the rescue of two women who were given a mauling by the Daily Telegraph yesterday over their insistence that their bodies were being exploited. At the weekend, the Olympic and Paralympic Associations and Big Brother NZ were forced to back down over their demands for 20 per cent of the money that ticket-holders spend on Olympic-related goods and services. Olympic Association chief executive Alistair Campbell had initially told the Telegraph yesterday that the government would have to take legal action against the associations to force them to produce a good and a bad outcome. He said that he was unable to break the news to the athletes that they could lose money and be shut out of the event that they had worked so hard to qualify for. "It's fair and reasonable if all these athletes have lost billions of dollars to get the opportunity to compete at the Olympics and they should be
