The following description of the background of the invention is provided to aid in understanding the invention, but is not admitted to be or describe prior art to the invention. Nucleic acid hybridization assays are widely used in scientific research and diagnostic procedures for identifying, classifying, and/or quantitating nucleic acids. Such procedures are used, for example, to identify nucleic acids characteristic of organisms or nucleic acid present in organisms, for analysis of samples of biological origin, and to detect or monitor biothreat agents. Hybridization assays can be used to detect the presence of nucleic acid from an organism or tissue. In nucleic acid hybridization assays, it is possible to detect as little as a few nanograms of target nucleic acid. For example, even a single human cell can contain more than 10–8 g of DNA. Thus, nucleic acid hybridization assays are often used for detection of specific nucleic acids in a background of nucleic acid derived from a wide range of organisms. Proteins or protein complexes are often used to detect target nucleic acids by
