This study investigated the cytotoxicity of diesel exhaust particles (DEP) on HepG2 cells and assessed their induction of EROD and CYP1A1 by the cometabolism of benzo[a]pyrene (BaP) using a time-course microdosing method. The cytotoxicity of

DEP on the HepG2 cells was determined by MTT assay. The induction of CYP1A1 and EROD was measured in cells after 24 h and 96 h treatment with DEP (at concentrations from 1.28-25 microg/mL and 0.14-1.86 microg/mL for CYP1A1 and EROD, respectively). The microdose study revealed that the maximum toxicity was observed at 100 microg/mL after 24 h. The results showed that DEP induced CYP1A1 and EROD at 1.86 and 0.14 microg/mL, respectively, after 24 h. When the exposure time increased from 24 to 96 h, the induction of CYP1A1 increased to 3.99 and 2.14-fold at 1.86 and 0.14 microg/mL, respectively. The induction of EROD showed a similar trend, increasing from 0.37 to 2.89-fold at 1.86 microg 2d92ce491b
