I have a list of strings: stringList = ['prefix','suffix', 'basis', 'foundation'] I want to check if the word 'prefix' is in stringList. A: The most efficient way to do this in Python is to use the any() built-in function: stringList = ['prefix','suffix', 'basis', 'foundation'] if 'prefix' in stringList: print("Found 'prefix' in stringList") Since the list of strings is small and the strings being searched for are long, this will probably perform better than just checking if any element in the stringList contains 'prefix'. A: You can use a list comprehension to find if any element in stringList contains the string: any(s in stringList for s in stringList) Q: How to fire Button Click event in another Form I have two forms Form1, Form2. From Form1 I start a thread and execute a function. Thread starts and executes a function. From Form1 the thread call a sub routine. And from this sub routine I need to fire the button click event in Form2. I can access Form2 but i cannot fire the click event. How can i fire the click event in Form2? A: You should be able to raise a button's click event from the thread by handling the Button.Click event. Just raise the event in the thread. If you're not sure how to do that, there's a good tutorial here. You'll want to do the same thing for other events that you want to raise from the thread (e.g., the Form.FormClosed event). On the other hand, you might be better off using BackgroundWorker for the thread, and marshaling the button events back to the main thread (e.g., using Invoke or BeginInvoke). #ifndef _Z_EN_FOCUS_H_ #define _Z
