Bill O'Reilly has been sparring with Chris Christie on Fox News lately over the mayor's claims that O'Reilly gave him an "object lesson" in how to deal with "political correctness," and O'Reilly's impression that Christie is a "leftist thug." On Monday's show, O'Reilly pointed out that the term "conservative" is not synonymous with "right-wing." He said that conservatives, whether on the left or the right, tend to support the Constitution and the rule of law. ADVERTISEMENT He noted that President Obama had said in a New York Times Magazine interview that there is not much difference between the right-wing Tea Party movement and the left-wing Occupy movement. O'Reilly then went on to point out that the Tea Party, like the Occupy movement, tends to favor limited government, fiscal restraint and free markets. He pointed out that while the Tea Party movement was less willing to support government intervention, the Tea Party movement has actually been supportive of environmental regulations. O'Reilly said that while "some conservatives are" pushing for government intervention, "most conservatives want to reduce the size of the government and the size of the federal government." He said that there is a huge difference between right and left-wing ideologies, and pointed out that conservatives have supported the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act, the reform of the Affordable Care Act, and protecting the right of women to have abortions. "That's what conservatives stand for," O'Reilly said. "Liberals say that, but they are wrong." ADVERTISEMENT After one of O'Reilly's producers pointed out that Christie is actually a conservative Republican, Christie replied that he could care less what a "wingnut" thinks. O'Reilly then reminded the governor that while his rhetoric is often portrayed as the opposite of the Tea Party, he's actually in favor of eliminating the Department of Education and getting rid of federal taxes. Christie said that O'Reilly was making
