I've come across a problem that is slightly more complicated than I expected, so I'm posting it here for others' benefit. I have a function which compares two lists (of distinct types) and returns a True or False depending on whether the lists are identical. In short, it's a static function which does a linear search. If it's implementing this function itself, it might look something like this: function AreListsIdentical(List1, List2) // Check the lengths of List1 and List2 to make sure that they're equal. If List1.Length List2.Length Then Return False End If // Initialize a counter that will count the number of unique values // in List1 and List2.
