Conventionally, in a vehicle door locking mechanism, which is arranged on a vehicle door, a lock mechanism is provided so that a key hole or the like is locked, and when a key is inserted into the key hole, the lock mechanism is unlocked. In recent years, this lock mechanism has been improved so that it can be unlocked by a specified electronic key even though the key is not inserted into the key hole. However, in a conventional locking mechanism, the key hole is provided on a vehicle door, and since the door is opened in order to open the door, even when the key is not inserted into the key hole, the key hole
