The muscle-specificity is maintained through the GAP-43 pathway, which is one of the pathways suggested to have an important role in the muscle-specificity of E2 production, as its impairment in the hindlimb muscles causes a decrease of E2 level in the hindlimb and an increase in the forelimb muscles \[@CR5]]. The present data suggest that the E2 level is higher in the hindlimb muscles and lower in the forelimb muscles of the SOD1(G93A) mice (Fig. 4{ref-type="fig"}). The age-dependent increase in this difference is consistent with the age-dependent increase in the E2 level in the SOD1(G93A) mice. Further studies on the possible role of the GAP-43 pathway in the muscle-specificity of E2 production will help to understand the mechanism underlying the muscle-specificity of the E2 level. Conclusion {#Sec5} ===== In the present study, we performed real-time RT-PCR analysis of 17 genes selected for their possible involvement in the regulation of testosterone levels in the male SOD1(G93A) mice. Among these genes, expression of 11 genes was significantly decreased, expression of four genes was unchanged, and the expression of two genes was increased in the SOD1(G93A) mice. Some of these genes are known to be involved in the production or action of testosterone in the mouse testis, and some are known to be involved in the regulation of testosterone level in the mouse testis. The decreased expression of these genes in the SOD1(G93A) mice suggests that the testosterone production is impaired in the SOD1(G93A) mouse testis. The increase in testosterone level in
