In bootstrap, the .row element has a default height, which means that the content (elements) within will only be as tall as the .row's height. If I set a set height for .row, it becomes unresponsive (of course) as content can't be as tall as that. How can I force a row to span the entire space while keeping responsive design? Here's a fiddle showing what I'm trying to accomplish. A: See HTML .col-md-3 .col-md-9 This works as you intended it. EDIT: You could modify the way you are using the Bootstrap Grid system, and not try and force the entire 2d92ce491b
