D. KaakonThe bizarre anti-war protest at the Republican Convention had to do with Tom Friedman, the New York Times columnist and TV pundit. His name may not be familiar to most of you, but he has been in the news recently. He called for a US attack on Iran in his Times op-ed piece on September 29th, 2007, which called for regime change in Iran. He also called for the US to attack Iraq, and urged the US to drop the UN Charter, which he called a "bureaucratic straitjacket." A few weeks later, Friedman was on

Pekin ducks found at Amulalaye et al.[@cit0005] and Zambian ducks from 2010.[@cit0009] From these figures we would expect 7--10 strains of IBV to have been circulating in the USA between 2005 and 2007. Our data is consistent with this and represents the first study to examine strains of IBV in the USA from 2005 to 2007. Interestingly, both this strain and the two detected in 2000 and 2003 have previously been found to be very widespread and persistent in China.[@cit0014] All three wild-type strains were able to infect and replicate in chicken embryos and in one passage in CEK cells. This result suggests that these strains would be able to replicate in chickens. Wild-type strain Beaudette was the most virulent, causing egg drop-off at both temperatures used in the study. Virulence of wild-type strain M41 in both directions in chicken embryos and the progeny in CEK cells was intermediate, and strain Ma5 was the least virulent of the wild-type strains. These results are consistent with findings in previous studies.[@cit0015] S633A, which is naturally resistant to nebulised type-1 interferon (IFN- α), is an example of an IFN- α -susceptible mutant that has been used as a model of avian resistance to IFN- α . Previously, the IFN- α -resistant M41 strain has been shown to be more virulent in chicken embryos than the S633A strain in one study.[@cit0015] The IFN- α -resistant strain appears to be more pathogenic than the IFN- α -susceptible strain due to the inefficient inhibition of viral replication by the IFN- α -susceptible strain. In this study, M41 was found to have a slightly higher embryo-to-egg transmission rate than S633A in eggs incubated at 37 °C and 41
