I personally don't use it because my screen reader and keyboard are much better, but I know it's a popular feature on Macs. There is a command-line version of Dragon NaturallySpeaking, which is installed by default, but I wouldn't recommend using it to speak text, because it's slow and cumbersome. It's better for reading commands and manipulating text in other ways. Another good option for text-to-speech is CereProc. I just installed it and it's fairly easy to get running.
