The most notable application of Photoshop is in the field of photo illustration. Its ability to manipulate images gives the artist tremendous creative control over the final look of their work. However, Photoshop can be used for almost any type of digital image alteration that is desired. It is one of the most powerful tools in image manipulation. Photoshop was introduced in 1990, and in the following 30 years, Photoshop has become a verb. Because of its popularity and perceived usefulness, we can even joke about the number of photoshops—or images altered with Photoshop—that we take each day. ## Using the Photoshop Layers Panel Photoshop layers are a way of organizing an image into separate areas, allowing you to overlay information, and manipulate each section independently. In Adobe Photoshop CS6, the Layers panel is an option you can access through the View menu. Photoshop CS6 also supports the Lightroom 3 Photo Sequencing feature that allows you to layer and mask your images. If you shoot in

RAW format, this feature is particularly important because it allows you to adjust layers without affecting the other layers in the sequence. The Layers panel is a great tool for getting all your images in one place. Think of it as a container for your image's individual sections. To add layers, follow these steps: 1. Open your image in Photoshop, and select an individual layer by pressing the Control+ or Command+ keys and clicking on the layer. The layer is highlighted in the Layers panel. 2. Click on the New Layer button, as shown in Figure 2-1 , or press Ctrl+N (Windows) or Command+N (Mac). 3. Give the new layer a name and enter a description of what you want to do with the layer. The new layer appears in the Layers panel, and the dialog box shown in Figure 2-2 appears. 4. Tick the boxes next to the options you want to use. 5. Click OK to create the layer and return to your image. The box colors represent each layer's status: * Active layer: The layer is active and can be used to edit the image. This is the layer you select in Step 1. * Inactive layer: This layer is inactive and can't be used to

Q: Linear regression between two columns, only with TRUE values I have a data frame with a column containing some values and another with TRUE/FALSE values. I want to perform a linear regression between these two columns, so that I can get the line equation, but only with the data that are TRUE. The true values could be 1,0,NA. Any recommendations? I tried some function (lm, glm, etc) but they can't accept NA values. A: You can create a dummy variable with logical index and run your model on this variable: library(dplyr) DF %>% mutate(dummy =!!as.numeric(x % group_by(dummy) %>% mutate(y = y) %>% do(lm(x ~ y)) # dummy x y # # 1 1 0.00000000 1.00000000 # 2 0 1.00000000 -0.82956926 Baku: Kiran Laghman, the highest-paid Indian cricketer in terms of IPL contract amount, has been signed by the Batsmen for the Indian Premier League team, Kings XI Punjab, for their 2018 season. Q: conditional css for input field on change I am trying to use a class on my input field to change the background color. The type is "password". If the password does not meet my critera the background color should not change. This works fine if you look it on button change. But when I do change on "change" it does not work, why? $('#pass').on('change', function () { if ($(this).val() === '') { $('#pass').addClass("cs-pass-invalid"); } else { $('#pass').removeClass("cs-pass-invalid"); } }); A: The problem is that the event you are binding the handler to in your html doesn't exist. Change to $('input[type=password]').on('change', function () { Millions of African Americans descended on Washington to watch President Barack Obama deliver his first major speech on the economy on the West Front of the U.S. Capitol. The raucous demonstration is a virtual replay of the 1960s civil rights march for voting rights, and the Black Lives Matter activists who threw the country into tumult in the wake of the recent police shooting of a black teenager in Baltimore. Black people are now more empowered than ever before. The number of African-Americans on corporate boards rose 23 per cent to 4,788 in 2014, according to a new report from Catalyst, a nonprofit that promotes inclusion of minorities and women. But we are, as Michelle Obama writes, "holding back." Although black Americans make up about 13 per cent of the U.S. population, we are underrepresented in the upper echelons of business, law and government. Among the top 50 law firms, only one had a black female partner — a New York firm with no Chicago representation. Black-led companies made up 1.9 per cent of S&P 100 companies last year, and there are few senior management teams with African-American representation. One bright spot is music, where the top six recording artists, three of them black men, include a country singer,
