The Los Angeles Rams are tasked with a lot this season. Beyond the regular operating system they run in LA, they need to find ways to improve the team and that starts on the front line. The Rams offense hasn't been great this season. Third in the league in yards per game, the Rams are on pace to be the worst offense in franchise history. They're also tied for 22nd in points per game and dead last in passing yards per game. There's a lot more to like about the Rams, but these numbers are some of the most glaring. If you compare the Rams offense to the league average, they actually are pretty good. Their average offensive DVOA is 13.6% and they have the sixth best scoring offense in the league. However, these numbers don't matter if you can't move the ball on the ground and through the air. The Rams offensive line is a complete mess this season. They've spent this offseason preaching in their press conferences about how they need to "be more physical." Right now, it's just quite the opposite. They've got a group of offensive linemen that are bailing out the coach on every single play. After running the ball 38 times for 0.1 yards per carry, the Rams lost starting guard Rob Havenstein to injury in Week 1.

The team then went out and signed center John Sullivan and center Brian Allen before losing Sullivan to the injured reserve list in Week 4. How did this happen? Simply because they're barely being used in the offense. Havenstein didn't even get a touch in the first three games of the season. Sullivan's role was limited f30f4ceada
