Q: Cascade deletes - how to batch update? I know that it is bad practice to do so, but I'm working on an application where users will be able to "cascade delete" rows, where once a row is deleted all its child rows (one level down) will also be deleted. I currently have the "cascade delete" statement set in the grid to true, and have the "immediate deletion" set to false, so there are two delete links on the row when a user clicks "delete". The delete links work fine if the user clicks the first delete link, but if the user then clicks the second delete link, the first delete link is called again. How can I stop this from happening, and should I be using batch updates to avoid this issue? A: The immediate deletion flag is a no-op, it's just there as an alternative way of deleting rows.

What you want to be doing instead is something like the following: ... $idArray = array(); $rs = sqlFetch 3e33713323
