Q: What is the best way to generate low-latency traffic on AWS? I want to be able to send traffic to AWS servers in an extremely low-latency manner, for example in the order of milliseconds. My last resort was to run an instance in the amazon aws marketplace and then use that to generate traffic, but I am sure there is a better way to achieve this. A: If you are on a private network, you could use an Amazon VPC VPN. When you create your VPN, you will need to configure the interface to use the private IP address of the target instance, and not of the public address of the internet. The advantage of doing this is that AWS will not have a public IP address, and will appear to be on your private network. Your instances will have a private IP address, so they will not be accessible from the public network. You would use a SSH tunnel to make a connection to your instance. You can do this with the aws ec2 cli, for example: aws ec2 connect-vpn my-instance-vpn-name --ssh-public-key-file ec2-private-key-file --vpn-gateway-id 8ea03d48-68d5-487d-a90b-d5de44cf4edb --vpn-id-1 143697142778155013415 // or whatever you assigned to the VPN interface as gateway_id You can make multiple tunnels to the same instance.
