SPAM In 2013 SOPA was introduced, presenting the MPAA/RIAA with a bill that would remove the current level of safeguard against online piracy by US citizens. SOPA had to be put on hold as it became a major political firestorm, but it was announced that a new "PRISM Act" was in the works, presenting the US government with the "legal authority to drag websites to the US, and then be forced to put a censor in place to block all traffic to these sites." SOPA required the creation of a new US "Censorship Board" responsible for censorship on the web; the board would have the power to shut down websites whenever they deemed it necessary, much like the old Soviet censorship apparatus.
