Ureteric bud morphogenesis depends on the proliferation and subsequent differentiation of ureteric bud epithelia. The present study was conducted to determine the effects of dietary protein intake on ureteric bud development. Eighty-five day-old Sprague-Dawley rats were divided into four dietary groups: a standard protein diet (S-diet) (20% protein), a low protein diet (L-diet) (7.5% protein), or a low protein diet with L-lysine (LL) (7.5% protein) as a source of dietary protein. Ureteric buds were harvested from the kidneys of each rat on postnatal day 11 (P11). The ureteric buds from the S-diet group exhibited a higher fraction of proliferating cells compared with the ureteric buds from the L-diet group (P
