US-Turkey data-sharing deal GMT 04:19 2011 Sunday, May 12 ISTANBUL - AFP The United States and Turkey will share more information about people wanted by their respective governments, a senior Turkish official said Saturday, as the first wave of defectors began to arrive from Syria. General influx starts Ankara and Washington announced last month that they were to cooperate more closely on international terror suspects, after Washington changed its own policies following the killing of Osama bin Laden in Pakistan. "We are cooperating on visa-free travel... and on sharing information about their whereabouts," Foreign Minister Ahmet Davutoglu said in an interview with Turkish daily Radikal published on Saturday. "We are working on this subject together. There is no wall between us," he said. The first wave of defectors began to arrive Saturday at Istanbul Ataturk airport after Turkey announced the lifting of its two-year state of emergency as part of a series of confidence-building measures that ended five weeks of anti-government protests. Also Saturday, the European Union foreign policy chief warned about an impending influx of asylum seekers in Europe as a "very large number" of people are expected to rush the EU's borders. "The real beginning of the waves will happen in the coming days... we expect at least five hundred thousand more people (appearing on the move)," Catherine Ashton said in Brussels. "The majority of them will arrive in Greece, where there is an enormous amount of pressure for passage from the states involved in the immigration issue." She cited the example of the southern European state of Spain, where people arriving from Morocco will be registered and processed within 20 days. With Turkey in the middle, it is a voyage that could take days, sometimes weeks, she added. This would mean a "very large and immediate" number of arrivals, she said. The EU executive chief stressed that the issue of migration needed to be discussed by the EU as a whole. She later revealed that the total number of arrivals is expected to be around 3.7 million this year.[Standards of follow-up after surgery of high-risk myelodysplastic syndromes]. SDMs exist in the form of an SDM framework, which is a plan that spans at least one development phase. An SDM framework is a plan that spans at least one development phase. It provides the foundation of a software development project; providing a stable blueprint of best practices, methodology and design decisions that are consistent. An SDM framework and associated development practices become more effective as the software development project progresses, through the phases of analysis, design, implementation, testing, and maintenance. Numerous SDM frameworks exist, from different perspectives and degrees of development emphasis, such as: Object-oriented programming and software design, Object-oriented modeling approaches (Dynamics Modelling Language, Data Management Modeling Language, Unified Modeling Language), Agile software development and test-driven development. To categorize SDM frameworks we highlight three approaches: Realistic versus idealistic. The idealistic approach to SDM focuses on designing and implementing a set of practices that is completed at the design and implementation phase of software development. The realistic approach focuses on designing and implementing a set of practices that is reusable, practical, and transferable. WBS driven versus non-WBS driven. WBS-driven means that work breakdown structure is a primary guiding principle when designing and implementing the SDM. The non-WBS driven approach is a major driving factor is the
