Field of the Invention The present invention generally relates to a method for integrating data between remote heterogeneous networks, and more particularly, to an automatic data integration method which may not necessarily require that data is stored within the Enterprise Information System (EIS) by the end-user, such that the data is made available to the end-user via a portal web page through the Internet. 2. Description of the Related Art EIS integration is a technical problem associated with the integration of enterprises having heterogeneous structures. One heterogeneous enterprise network might include an EIS which is accessed by various other heterogeneous networks, while not having a similar EIS. When a user of the various heterogeneous enterprise networks requests a certain data of the heterogeneous enterprise network, the user cannot directly access the data of the heterogeneous enterprise network via a certain web page of the network. Therefore, if data has not been stored in the EIS by the corresponding enterprise, the user cannot directly access data of the heterogeneous enterprise network via a web page of the enterprise. For example, for example, a user who wants to inquire into the stock of industry X (such as, for example, industry X's profit and loss) from different heter 09e8f5149f
