A track hoe is a farm implement used to prepare land for planting. A track hoe includes a frame that supports an implement. The frame has a pair of spaced parallel legs that are coupled together by cross members and, together, define a generally V-shaped configuration. The implement is a track assembly that is connected to the frame. The track assembly includes a plurality of track links coupled together end-to-end. Each track link is pivotally connected to the frame by a pair of track connections and each track connection includes an upper part that is received in a socket formed in the frame and a lower part that is received in a socket formed in the track link. The implement is movably connected to the frame by an implement frame pivotally connected to the frame by a pair of pivotal connections. The implement is movable between a work position and a transport position. In the work position, the implement frame is rotated about an axis generally parallel to the frame legs, whereby the implement is lowered to a working position with the implement frame located generally over the legs and generally along the ground. In the transport position, the implement frame is rotated about an axis generally perpendicular to the frame legs, whereby the implement is elevated to a transport position with the implement frame located generally over the legs and generally away from the ground. The implement frame is pivotally connected to the frame by a pair of track connections. Each track connection includes an upper part that is received in a socket formed in the implement frame and a lower part that is received in a socket formed in the frame. Each track connection is pivotally connected to a respective one of the frame legs and the implement is raised and lowered as the implement frame is pivoted in a direction generally perpendicular to the frame legs. The implement frame can be raised and lowered between the working position and the transport position by raising and lowering the implement frame between the working position and the transport position. The implement includes a bucket assembly that is connected to the implement frame. The bucket assembly includes a movable bucket and a handle assembly. The movable bucket is connected to the implement frame by a bucket connection. The handle assembly is connected to the implement frame by a handle connection. The handle connection includes a handle that is pivotally connected to the implement frame by a handle pivot. The handle is movable between an operating position and a storage position. In the operating position, the handle is generally above
