References External links Category:Windows-only software Category:Computer-related introductions in 2011Q: Cannot use pointer to non-static member function I have a problem in my C++ code. I have a template class as follows: template class Foo{ int* data; public: void foo(); }; And I want to use it as follows: class Bar { Foo* f; }; int main(){ Bar b; b.f->foo(); return 0; } The problem is that it tells me that I cannot use a non-static member in a static member function. What is the problem? Thanks in advance! A: Class templates are not classes. A function template instantiated with a parameter is not a function, it is a template object (like any class or namespace template). In general, a non-static member of a class template is not available, because a class template is not a class in the usual sense of the word, but just a placeholder for a type. If you want to make a template a class, you should make it a class template: template class Foo{ int* data; public: void foo(); }; And then make use of it as follows: template void Bar
