Category:S.T.A.L.K.E.R.Q: How to detect if a friend visited a certain page on the server? When logging in to the website I want to display some information about what my friend is doing (pages he/she visited, etc). The site is written in php, but I'm interested in using the same functionality that is used in Facebook. For example, if my friend is looking at a list of 20 pages and clicks on page 20 I want to show that on the website. How can I detect the pages that were visited on the server? A: I assume you want to know this in real time, but given that the user has already authenticated, you might be able to extract this information from the user's session. This is not very robust in practice, but of course there may be some value in doing this. If not, however, there is one fairly straight-forward way to do this, and that is to have a persistent counter/counters table in your database, and maintain a daily/hourly/minutely/secondly/etc cron job that updates this counter based on the request parameters (e.g., which page the user is looking at, whether it is new or old, etc). [Precision medicine in lung cancer treatment]. Personalized medicine has become an important trend in the last years. The main paradigm of this approach is to identify the tumors biomarkers for a tailored patient-tailored treatment. In lung cancer, the detection of specific mutations in driver genes is the key for the choice of the most appropriate treatment for each patient. The incidence of epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR) and anaplastic lymphoma kinase (
