EventLog Inspector provides an easy to use interface which allows you to manipulate the Windows Event Log. Tabbed layout: The main feature of Event Log Inspector is its tabbed layout that allows you to switch between each section of the application without having to hunt for the tools to see each section individually. Event Log Inspector uses useful toggle buttons (including an all event or no events shown button) and forms to interact with the user and view graphical representations of the event log. Generate Reports Event Log Inspector allows you to generate several different types of reports that you can share with co-workers, friends, or developers of new software systems. The generated reports can be saved into a local file or as a Web page. Subscribe to Notification Services Other than providing the ability to view and search through the event log, Event Log Inspector can also act as a subscriber to other event log services such as syslog. This allows you to see the events that are being logged by other services. Setup Service While Event Log Inspector is installing, it will automatically search for all current system services and try to setup Event Log Inspector as a subscriber for each service. This will allow you to see the service's log events in a tab alongside other log events. Service Information Event Log Inspector is able to display a short description, setting, server name, and built-in help topics for each service, giving you insight into what the service is supposed to be used for. Service Logs From the Service Logs section of the application, you can easily view the log information for a service in a list. This list can be refreshed using a button. Backup Logs Event Log Inspector also contains a section that allows you to backup system event logs using a series of formatted text files. This allows you to back up your event logs so that if you accidentally delete or corrupt any of your event logs, you can easily restore them. Enhancements Event Log Inspector contains some minor enhancements that make it simpler to use. This includes a button to refresh all records and built-in help topics which provide contextual information about the application. DNA microarray analysis of 190 endometrial carcinomas has revealed mutational inactivation of p53 tumor suppressor gene in 51% of cases. This study was designed to assess the utility of immunohistochemical detection of p53 protein in the endometrial cancer as a supplementary diagnostic tool. We analyzed the expression of p53 protein in tumors of 186 women, including 151 patients with endometrial carcinoma and 35 patients with other types of endometrial lesions. Tumors of 141 women were endometrioid-type adenocarcinoma. Mutation of p53 gene was identified in 26/151 (17.2%) endometrial carcinomas. Expression of p53 protein was found in 142/151 (94.7%) endometrial carcinomas; it was observed both in cases with gene mutations as well as without gene mutations. Abnormal p53 protein expression was noted in 29/35 (82.8%) cases of atypical hyperplasia and 57/123 (46%) cases of malignant endometrial tumors. No statistically significant differences in the expression rate of p53 protein were observed in different grades of endometrial carcinoma, in patients with or without lymph-node metastases. Sensitivity and specificity of p53 immunostaining was calculated as 85.4% and 90.3%, respectively.
