N-cadherin is considered an oncogene in several tumors, but its role in breast cancer is unclear. In this study, we determined N-cadherin expression in human breast cancer cell lines and in 40 primary breast carcinomas and analyzed the prognostic significance of this antigen in a subgroup of 256 patients. N-cadherin was expressed in 11 of 40 human breast cancer cell lines and 6 of 40 primary breast tumors, and was lost in the majority of cell lines following N-cadherin antisense transfection. In primary tumors, the loss of this cadherin correlated significantly with a high histologic grade (P < .001). Q: Is using class names as pseudo variables in PHP a good practice? I've been thinking about how to write an extremely simple generic function in PHP and I think of two different approaches (not meant to be followed as the final and perfect solution, but just as possible "solutions" to a simple problem): Having only the class name as a function parameter and replace it with another one. Returning and using the class name as a pseudo variable inside the function. These
