Q: Django Rest Framework Data migration I have created several models in django but now I am having some trouble setting up the rest framework for these models. At the moment I have several classes and they all depend on two class that are self. I want to set up my API so that I can run a migration and have it read and write to my database without needing to download an app or anything. If I could use the django admin or views to make this possible that would be ideal. I'm not sure how to go about this or if it is possible. Thanks! A: It's not possible out of the box in Django 1.4. You can use a mixin to add the changes and the rest_framework do the migration part, see this question for example: django rest framework: perform custom data migration WND EXCLUSIVE Obama administration confirms 'pilot' crisis at Gitmo 'This is the real Guantanamo Bay' Nicholas Hallett reports on his visit and interview with Omar Khadr The Obama administration has confirmed that there has

Screenshot: Dropping a file to Nautilus and select "copy" Re-opening that same file and try to do a "Paste as link", there's nothing shown in the pasted target file instead a generic icon. When trying to open the target, the file is opened but there is no visual indication of being copied or not, and does not show any information about the original file or properties of the copied file. Any clue on this problem? How can I achieve the behavior of the "copy" buttons on the previous versions? A: I've found the answer by 6a5afdb4c
