Synaptic targeting of collybistin family members defines a novel small family of clathrin adaptor proteins. Collybistin family members form a recently described group of proteins that we show to be localized to synaptic compartments. Cloning of mouse cDNA revealed that members of this family are small proteins containing 2 stretches of armadillo repeats. When fused to green fluorescent protein (GFP), all collybistin family members (COBL2, COBL1, COBL3, COBL4) can target the protein to distinct regions of the synapse, with localization to pre- and postsynaptic structures and to dendritic spines being common. Although endogenous collybistins are highly expressed at the synapse, a minor fraction of the proteins is present in the cytosol. Coexpression of the C-terminally deleted or N-terminally truncated collybistin variants with GFP shows that neither distal nor extreme N-terminal extensions have an influence on localizing the respective collybistins to the synapse. Altogether, collybistins represent the first known adaptor proteins that selectively target synaptic structures.Kazakhstan's Sahiner Holding, which is listed in New York, today announced a merger with Bix Dillion, a privately held firm focused on the telecommunication, media and information-technology markets. The merger will combine Dillion and its subsidiaries with Sahiner's strategic growth segments, including its global satellite fleet and regional fixed satellite services business in South Korea. Dillion will form the new privately held entity, SNHI (Dillion/Sahiner Network Holdings International), to which Sahiner will contribute its global fixed-satellite business. Sahiner's satellite fleet and regional fixed services business is expected to be re-branded as SNHI. Dillion will own a controlling interest in SNHI. Sahiner will retain a majority interest in the new SNHI and will remain an independent publicly traded company. "The telecom and media markets have faced unprecedented consolidation in recent years, which has resulted in reduced entry barriers and lower barriers to competition and growth," said Al Iqbal Dillion, Bix Dillion's chairman. "The combination of Dillion and Sahiner's complementary products and solutions, along with the new opportunities inherent to the combined company, provide us with an optimal growth platform for the foreseeable future."
