Athlete Awareness Week – focus on mental health We are all aware that various mental health conditions and illnesses affect sportspeople. Over a third of people with psychological health problems are estimated to have participated in sport or physical activity. That's why the Mental Health Foundation Scotland (MHF), in partnership with Sport England, is organising a week of events for those in sport. The aim is to raise awareness of the range of mental health conditions and illnesses, and the support available in sport. The plan is for events and work to take place across the UK. Athletes can be involved by talking to people in sport about mental health, and vice versa. It is hoped that more people will come forward to talk about mental health issues. And what better place than the National Swimming Centre in Bathpool, where the members of the winning team at the 2016 Commonwealth Games have come to talk to young swimmers about confidence, nerves and the pressures that they face in training and competition. It's a year to the Games. The Scottish Commonwealth and Olympic Council (SCOC) is working closely with the MHF to highlight the importance of champion mental health. The two-day Athlete Awareness Week will be held in the capital from June 27 to 28. How to get involved The week's events will take place from June 27 to 28./* * $RCSfile: AbstractDomain.java,v $ * * Copyright (c) 2005-2010, Richard Cornwell & Richard G.
