Stubbing whole update Im trying to hook a mongoose model up with a MongoDB database using Mongoose. Now I want to update the data in the database as soon as an object gets inserted or updated.

The Problem is that the MongoDB driver only lets me do a query or an update on one document at a time, so i have to attach the callback as a middle man and stub everything for the result. The problem is, that this part of the process can take a while, and i need to update the data as fast as possible. So is there a way to Stub the whole query or update? A: I think you need to make sure you're not pulling the rug out from under your async operations by calling callback on the entire update. What you can do is set the flag "waitToInitialize" to false and then after the update has finished you call it. If you do this you'll need to check if waitToInitialize is set to true every time you make an update/query. In that case you can make it run as soon as the change is made. London landlords can be jailed for inviting aliens into Britain Share this Landlords can be jailed for inviting aliens to live in private homes, under a new amendment to the Immigration Bill. Landlords have previously been allowed to admit foreign students and workers, but the new law takes over that, says the Times. From September onwards, a landlord could be imprisoned for up to six months for letting rooms to more than 10 foreign nationals. The measure is because landlords can't be held responsible if a tenant is deported. The proposed law, which will appear in the House of Lords on Wednesday, has already angered some landlords. Lionel Harmon, owner of a number of east London pubs and an immigration consultant, said: "I don't accept that landlords are responsible for the immigration status of their tenants."
