More than a hundred thousand people have been displaced by recent wildfires in California, and experts have expressed concern that climate change is exacerbating forest fire danger. US President Donald Trump has announced a plan to streamline clean air and water laws to make them more adaptable to the changing climate. But political commentators are divided about whether it will improve the chances of containing or preventing wildfires. Vox.com/climate explains how climate change is making it harder to put out wildfires If you have been cut off by a fire or have been affected by wildfire in the past or present, what can you do to help? The BBC has compiled a list of some of the services available to people in affected areas in California and Oregon. Please submit tips and updates for this page to the BBC News Facebook page or email us at tips@bbc.co.uk.

Such devices are fabricated in trenches formed in the surface of a semiconductor substrate and are usually spaced by gaps or strips of insulating material to isolate them. For the most part, the gap or strip of insulating material is formed from a spin-on-glass (SOG) material. The material is deposited on the surface of the substrate and subsequently spun or poured to a desired thickness. As the name suggests, the spin-on-glass (SOG) is a viscous fluid which is flowed and then spun onto the surface of a semiconductor wafer which has a patterned coating of photoresist or other photosensitive material formed on it. The patterned coating of photosensitive material is a resist mask. The resist mask is a pattern on the surface of the wafer which defines sites on the wafer where the SOG material is to be applied. A common method of applying the SOG material is to use a coating and developing machine such as a "Covat" apparatus. A thin layer of SOG is poured onto the wafer. The machine spin-coats the SOG material on the 648931e174
