"All the 22 players represented in FIFA are already in the lead when it comes to motion capture data," said Oliver Bierhoff, Chief Gameplay Director. "For FIFA 22, we are taking an even closer look at game data, to better distinguish the players' movement and activities." "With the FIFA Interactive World Cup coming to a close, we are now looking into how to incorporate even more player emotion into our game, using data from the real-life matches," said Bierhoff. "Like you, I love FIFA and I want FIFA to be the best game it can be.

That means making the technical side of the game even better than it has ever been. We are looking into ways to capture real-life data and implement it into the game, to give you FIFA 22 that only a real life football match can provide. I will have more to say about this and about our lead playability tests in the near future." FIFA 22 introduces new Player Attributes, and players are now able to modify game play by changing the speed of movement and increasing or decreasing a player's stamina. In the demo that made its debut at EA Play 2017, an injured player barely moves and limps to the sidelines, where he collapses in pain. He is revived by a teammate, who runs towards the pitch to bring in his vital medicine. The demo also showcases the new Teammate Assist feature, which enables players to take control of one of their teammates and influence play and decisions. FIFA 22 will be released worldwide on September 27, 2017 for Xbox One, PlayStation 4 and PC (Windows, macOS, Linux), and is now available for pre-order in all regions. This year's FIFA Interactive World Cup, a global competition that celebrates FIFA as one of the world's largest sporting titles, is underway. Nine FIFA Interactive World Cup countries including Mexico, the Philippines, and India are hosting events around the world, with nations such as New Zealand, Colombia, Saudi Arabia, and Vietnam playing home games against fellow nations.
