Australia has one of the most highly developed and educated workforces in the world. With over 600,000 Australians receiving higher education this year, the need for studying has never been higher. With greater numbers of people joining the workforce, the need for equally higher numbers of professionals has never been so vital. Students who work while they study lose out on the salary they could potentially earn, however, which puts them at a disadvantage. If you are working, however, the online tuition option is perfect for your needs. You can still keep up with your studies while working while you also reap the benefits of earning a full-time salary from your talent. Choosing the right online tuition service is important. It is essential to choose an online tuition service that meets your needs and can deliver online tuition that is consistent with your course and the course itself. The services out there vary, however, so it is essential to take your time in making the right choice. Online tuition also comes in the form of distance learning options and home tuitions, so you can get the best option for you. While distance learning is perfect for those that are separated from their colleges or have families that have a range of responsibilities, online tuition is the best option for those looking for better working hours. You will need to make sure that you choose an online tuition service that is reliable, trustworthy and has a great reputation. The online tuition service you choose will be looking after your tuition while you work. This is vital for a successful online tuition relationship. ◆ agency, both as much as people in private companies, are in the best position to offer the most useful and helpful (but not false) feedback. ~~~ apaprocki My point about Alexa isn't particularly different from the point I'm making in my article. Alexa is an x.ai instance, and as such it is open to being misused. I can use it to poke fun at technology companies just as you can use it to poke fun at "carpet companies". You can also (without using x.ai) use it to do miscellaneous creepy experiments on a private network. We all have devices out there that can potentially be a part of this layer. Alexa, the carrier, is not a big enough barrier to prevent misuse. If you're looking for something to incite a response from Alexa (and not from the x.ai instance itself), it's likely you're better off writing to an Alexa support email address. E.g. [~~~ Etheryte That's not necessarily true as even if the end goal is for it to respond to support, you could use it for rogue hacks as well. I've worked on projects where I intentionally send the same commands to one of my devices so that I can see what they would respond to. For instance, if you type in "Alexa, exercise" to a Philips Hue lamp, then see what it would reply to you. Those are generally weird combinations, so there are likely even more you can do with Alexa than that. ~~~ apaprocki Right, it is an Alexa instance. It has input and output. But you can only do outbound connectivity. And you can only control the input. You can't control its output. ----- Wowfunhappy There's an alternative: [I tried running it in a guest VM on my setup and it worked well enough. ----- ckastner Wayback Machine: [
