We got to the hotel at about 7:30 and they had reserved the room for us. We were checked into our room and given instructions on the telephone about where everything was, made sure we had all we needed, and were sent off to the spa to relax. We arrived at the spa in the room we were given, which wasn't in the back of the building, but in a little side room off the lobby. The room was small, but it was a much, much better room than the one we had been in previously. The room had a large patio door, and the room was very clean. The room had a double bed with a large comfortable mattress. We could not believe how clean and spic and span everything in the room was. It was very refreshing, compared to the last hotel we stayed at. The room was quiet, but we didn't hear any other noises of the front desk. Upon entering the room, we were given a tour of the facilities. For a $25 per day, it was outstanding! It was very well kept, and we found all the services we needed. We were able to try out every spa treatment that was available, including four daily facials, body wraps, body scrubs, and massages. We took advantage of each and every one. We tried the body scrub and it was just what we needed, the room was perfumed with beautiful scents. We then took the body wrap, which was a wonderful way to relax in a room perfumed with scents like mint and coffee. We tried the massage and it

I am just learning DirectX and I am trying to recreate a simple example which will add a small mesh to the scene. I am currently using the following code: // Simple vector to vertex array conversion std::vector vertices; std::vector indices; UINT nIndices = 0;
