Comparison of Lithium and Calcium Glycerophosphate in the Treatment of Japanese Patients with Multiple Myeloma: A Phase II Study of GEM2001. The aim of this study was to compare the safety and efficacy of 2 different oral agents, lithium and calcium glycerophosphate, in the treatment of multiple myeloma. In this multicenter, open-label phase II clinical trial, 61 newly diagnosed multiple myeloma patients were randomly assigned to receive oral lithium carbonate or calcium glycerophosphate. The two drugs were administered orally twice daily for 3 months. The outcomes analyzed were overall response rate, bone marrow response, progression-free survival, and safety and tolerability. The primary end point of the study was overall response rate (ORR). Secondary end points included efficacy by immunoglobulin isotype, safety and tolerability, number of patients requiring dose reduction, and number of patients with required dose titration. Other safety parameters included adverse events, changes in levels of serum and urinary creatinine, and variations in bone marrow biopsy. At week 24, the complete response rate (CRR) was 70.5% (20/28) for lithium and 41.7% (12/29) for calcium. The overall response rate (ORR) was 72.5% (20/27) for lithium and 58.6% (17/29) for calcium, with similar results for light-chain and heavy-chain myeloma patients. The CRR was higher in heavy-chain multiple myeloma

(71.4%; 20/28) than in light-chain multiple myeloma (46.4%; 8/17). Lithium had superior efficacy than calcium, with a significantly higher ORR in light-chain multiple myeloma and a higher CRR in heavy-chain multiple myeloma. Lithium administration was associated with more patients requiring dose reduction and dose titration. Adverse events were mild and did not require dose adjustment. Both drugs were well-tolerated. Both lithium and calcium glycerophosphate are safe and efficacious.Q: Read file
