This year, Stephen King fans will get to experience the wonder that is the Stephen King film series for the first time with Netflix. On May 5, the subscription video on demand service announced that it would begin streaming movie adaptations of Stephen King's On Writing and Revival of The Shining. The streaming giant simultaneously released the first trailer for On Writing, which stars Tovah Feldshuh. The series stars James Max, Helena Mattsson, and Matthew Alan. On Writing, which is described as a "personal story of how our enduring love and desire for literature connects us to our truest, best selves," stars Tovah Feldshuh, who made her breakthrough playing Jackie Kennedy in the ABC miniseries Camelot and HBO series The Leftovers. The last season of that show aired in 2017. "This is an extraordinary moment in our history as storytelling creators and we're thrilled to be able to bring a project like this to Netflix," said Eli Horowitz and Andrew Davies, directors on the project. "We've been fans of Stephen King's On Writing for many years, and now we can finally share it." The series follows the lives of the book's co-authors, who include King, Josh Zetumer, and Max Keller. The series will provide a new take on the author's experiences as a writer and the genesis of his work, as well as the emotional and psychological consequences of writing. The revival of The Shining has already been nominated for this year's Saturn Awards. The film was directed by Mick Garris and stars Danny Huston and Mary Lynn Rajskub. It will also feature original music by Paul Revere and the Raiders' Mark Lindsay. The original score is being composed by members of the horror rock band Goblin. The film will become the third installment in Netflix's confirmed Stephen King film series, following the recently announced Dark Tower movie and 1922, which will focus on the rise and fall of a fictional newspaper. On Writing debuted to positive reviews on August 6, 2015, in the United States. It was given a score of 6.3 out of 10 by Total Film, which said that the series should "get even better from here

BRUSSELS (Reuters) - The European Union is still in breach of its own financial commitments to three non-EU nations, which could trigger a financial penalty, even after EU officials clarified the terms of an agreement with the Balkan countries. A six-month-old collapsed plastic baby, "Le Petit Nicolas", is seen lying in a basket at a makeshift doctor's office in Brussels, Belgium October 20, 2006.

REUTERS/Francois Lenoir On Friday, EU officials said the EU had clarified the meaning of the words "market economy" in the agreement with Albania, Macedonia and Montenegro to help them comply with EU standards for financial health. The European Commission also clarified on Friday that a commission decision in 2004 when it found that the three states were failing to meet EU rules forbidding them to keep their budgets on an artificial high level of debt or to keep their currency exchange rates under EU surveillance was final. The words "market economy" were interpreted in a different manner by the Balkan states than by the EU. The four Balkan states are struggling for months to join EU and the bloc's two other budding eastern-most members, Bulgaria and Romania.

EU officials have predicted that the Balkan states could technically be out of the European Union before they have joined the other two. The EU said it would have time to make money available to the Balkan states and their pro-EU parties if the Balkan states miss the "by 2014" deadline for joining the European Union. But EU officials told Reuters that if they are still in breach of the EU-Balkan agreement, they could face a financial penalty. EU officials said the EU could withhold the $1.5 billion the bloc has paid to the Balkan states since 2003. They said the EU believed it was in its rights to require the Balkan states to pay their dues from the EU money.

TALKING THING TO YOU The EU, Macedonia and Albania signed the deal on Oct. 9, 2003, in a bid to get the Balkan states on their way towards joining the EU. The deal provides the EU with funds for southern Europe for three years, from 2004 to 2007, to try to stabilize the region. Macedonia and Albania were not part of the deal at the time because of their 1cdb36666d
