Q: Recreate WPS Office Image Editor/API in HTML5? WPS Office is pretty neat on the desktop, but it seems they're holding the whole thing back for HTML5: What I'd love to do is emulate their image editor in HTML5, so basically can draw, draw lines, create shapes, move/zoom/scale, all of that. I have an idea for how to do it (which I'll go over below) but I want to make sure this isn't already done or is doing what I want to do. I'd love to use something like Krita, but only if it has support for WPS's components. What I would expect to find in something like this: (This is pretty much straight out of WPS, but an image editor would have drawn lines and a "Shape" tab) A: Thanks to Philip, I've been able to figure out an easy way to accomplish the shape functionality that would enable me to essentially emulate the HTML5 WPS Office API. Here's a sample of what you would expect to see: The code I used for this example can be found on this jsFiddle here: It's a very simple canvas, with some nodes, and a few helper classes. I'm not going to go through them all, because the code is probably a lot more readable in the jsfiddle. The key helper classes are: MouseSelection: To select what area you're going to work on. Path: The node used to draw/fill the shape. ShapeSelection: To store the polygons/rectangles selected by the MouseSelection. The raw image data for this example is located here: 1) Pre-load the image into a canvas 2) Create the MouseSelection 3) Select the image with the MouseSelection 4) Create the first Path node 5) Create the shape with the Path node 6) Draw the first polygon in the shape 7) Create the next Path node 8) Select the shape with the Path node 9) Draw the next polygon in

The effects of testicular implants on the growth of lean rats. The effects of zinc, copper and zinc-copper testicular implants (Progerix) on the weight and the cross-sectional area of the testes in lean rats during the first 4 months after implantation were determined. There were significant time differences for both weight and size of the testes in the zinc and copper implanted rats; and for the zinc-copper implants the differences were significant for size. Copper, but not zinc or zinc-copper implantations resulted in a significant increase in the volume of the testes and spermatozoa per testis. Copper and zinc-copper testicular implants had no affect on the spermatozoa per gram of testis but both had a significant effect on total spermatozoa counts. In order to provide an adaptive driving experience, modern automobile manufacturers typically employ adaptive steering technologies. Adaptive steering technologies may include adaptive cruise control, which may be used to maintain a safe distance between a host vehicle and a lead vehicle. Vehicles equipped with adaptive cruise control may rely upon radar, ultrasonic, or laser-based distance detection systems to monitor the lead vehicle. Using these techniques, the vehicles may stay at a specified distance. Adaptive steering technologies may also rely upon the advanced driver assist systems of the vehicles to assist in the steering of the vehicles. Advanced driver assist systems may use various sensors (e.g. cameras, GPS, radar, etc.) to assist with steering the vehicle. Advanced driver assist systems may also vary the steering of the vehicle based upon a setting of the host vehicle. For example, advanced driver assist systems may steer the host vehicle into the direction in which the driver is steering the vehicle to avoid a sudden lane change from the host vehicle.
