From social media to online shopping, our life has become largely centered around the digital world. In this digital world, smartphones, tablets and wearable technology are driving a new age of tech; IoT. In this age, smartphones are transformed into smartwatches, smart rucksacks and fitness trackers. The Internet of Things is a phenomenon that is slowly becoming an everyday part of our lives and broadens the potential for growth in many sectors. The IoT is not just about the Internet of things; it is an enabler to allow people to access more of the Internet, and anything connected. With the IoT, it is now possible to connect anything and anyone to the Internet. It is also not just about connecting people and things, but the dynamics of interaction. Through the IoT, data from the physical world is connected to the Internet; giving us a better understanding of our societies, economies and businesses. Though there is a lot of enthusiasm around the IoT, this sector has a long way to go. The IoT will require innovation around wireless technology, Wi-Fi and 5G connectivity, and also intelligent algorithms and machine learning solutions. The Internet of Things gives us new ways to have a seamless and stress-free experience. Our goals will not be achieved if we don't think of these technologies that enhance our lives as an opportunity for growth and innovation. With the Internet of Things, many industries are exposed to new opportunities. A lot of these opportunities will be driven by the mobile sector, which is built upon technologies such as a wireless network, but comes with challenges. Many companies are likely to emerge and be innovated by the IoT. These companies may have b7e8fdf5c8

Chapter 1 - WALL STREET AND ITS SECRET SECRETS: How a Fund Manager Can Profit By

Marc A. Chaikin, CFA

I am a CFA. I believe that you deserve to know what a fund manager knows about stocks. When a fund manager decides to commit someone else's money to investing in stocks, he has a responsibility to have skin in the game. If a fund manager doesn't truly believe in the stocks he is recommending, I think he should not be representing other investors. Let me be clear. I believe that the best fund managers in the world are giving their clients real, honest, unbiased opinions. This doesn't mean I agree with their recommendations, but at least I know they are trying to give each of their investors the best possible advice. If a fund manager makes money at the expense of his investors' interests, he should pay the price. That's why I'm writing this book. I'm also writing this book because I think the financial press should be more transparent in its reporting of how investors
