DisqusManifest Community ANNOUNCEMENTS Posted by: Nick Zaugg on Saturday, June 28, 2015 THEME PACKS - THEME NAMES - THEME CODES We have begun theme packs for Community Forge. While there are thousands of examples in the theme packs and posts online of how they can be setup, we have decided to try to standardize the theme packs a bit more. Theme Packs will follow the same lines, the community will create them and the forum will use them (in case of a conflict, it will be you guys who will decide what goes into the packs and it will be you guys who will decide if a pack is required). Now the first theme pack will be called "Awesome" and will include everything from basic theme elements to comprehensive plugins. "Awesome" will represent the theme pack that is most commonly used to build forums. Subsequently, additional theme packs will be added over time as more and more organizations and organizations use the theme packs to build forums. The "Awesome" theme pack is setup to be generic and serve as a starting point for people to use. Theme Packs will have a common color scheme with a few variations in the appearance. The template will be on the following lines: The theme pack color scheme background picture font logo/banner Themes will have custom icons where the color scheme will be black and white. This is to give the feel of customizing parts of the UI with your colors instead of the standard red/green/blue. Some people might not use or are uncomfortable with this theme, so we have included 3 variations of the awesome theme. You can pick which one you like: stark black and white vintage black and white modern black and white Go b7e8fdf5c8

Windows MultiMedia Codecs (w32codecs) is a collection of 32-bit and 64-bit Windows-specific codecs (.dll files) for commonly-used multimedia formats, such as Windows Media Audio, Microsoft Windows Media Video, and RealMedia. They support formats currently in widespread use, and help you play, record, edit, and transfer such formats on Windows. There are several reasons why you might need w32codecs. For example, some multimedia formats have been adopted or abandoned. You might want to play media files, such as WMV, MP3, AVI, VCD, DVR-MS, or DVDs, that are not covered by the embedded codecs. Most of these files are not supported by Microsoft Windows Media Player, but can play with some third-party players. For example, WMP can play MP3 files, but not most VCDs. Only VLC can play some DVDs and some MPEG movies. There may be proprietary formats in your favorite video or music player or in a digital camera which do not support standard formats, but which play with the codecs. You may have been using Linux instead of Windows, and have had to install the codecs manually. It may be that your computer uses some form of hardware encryption, and that some or all of the standard codecs are not available. A standard list of codecs is provided on the Multimedia Codecs Page. Additionally, w32codecs is required for some common applications, such as Nero Burning ROM, Visual C++, Microsoft Office, Java, Adobe Flash, and several games, such as Doom and Quake.
