Comic Book Pages Comic books use a color-shifting system called CMYK to create images on comic book pages. Why? Because inks take on different colors depending on the density of the color on the paper. For example, blue ink in a higher density is lighter in color than blue ink in a lower density. Another example is black ink. Black ink in a higher density is darker in color than black ink in a lower density. To get around the problem of different inks, colorists use a toner to add color to the different inks in a more accurate way. The toner looks lighter than the ink so that when you add color to the page, it looks like it's going on in between the ink lines. For a long time, comic book pages were printed in a 4-color CMYK process with a black separator and printed from the back of the paper. But this method is impractical for color work because you cannot actually see the colors in the blue, cyan, and magenta inks, so you would have to use a separate white-tint separator for each color. As you can imagine, this is an incredibly tedious and expensive process. Today, most comic book pages are printed in a much more time- and cost-effective process, known as CMYK+G, which stands for Cyan, Magenta, Yellow, and Black plus the addition of a small amount of Green. Because the colors in CMYK+G are all visible on the page, the reason for using CMYK for comic books is no longer the case. However, it is a good idea to play safe and use a traditional CMYK process as well, just to be safe. ## Color Management and Output Devices Techniques and software that deal with the color of digital images are essential to the success of any image retouching and color correction. The most obvious way to color-correct a digital image is to use Color Management (CM) software. It enables you to make adjustments to the colors of a photo, but it does not provide any guarantees as to the quality of the image once it is printed. The reason you'd want to use color management software is so that you can

Q: How to use android home screen for app crashing? I am working on an Android app using eclipse and I am getting my app crashing frequently in HTC. So this is temporary. I am using an old Nokia phone which does not have any option of updating the OS. Only option is to restart the phone. So is there a way to use the home screen to crash my app instead of rebooting the phone because it takes about 10-15 mins to reboot. I have an app crashing too frequently, so it really kills the user. A: The best solution is to get your hands on an Android device that has an updated OS version, and then use a. This will ensure that the issue is definitely not happening on the phone, and that it isn't something that is introduced by a newer version of Android. If it is happening on a phone that you are not able to get your hands on, you can "cheat" like so: Clone your app on a device with a newer version of Android. Change your target version in the AndroidManifest file to the desired target version of Android. When a crash happens, you can use a debugger to halt your app just before the crash happens, and then change the target version to the next version of Android. Keep your app paused, and the next time you start your app, you can either (a) have it pause in the middle, or (b) go straight to the last location you stopped. This will allow you to target a specific version of Android that causes crashes. A: Your app has probably a bug that the phone manufacturer hasn't fixed, so you can try restarting the phone. If you are able to see the phone's screens (home, phone, etc.) you can do the restart during those screen shows. If it happens when the phone is locked, you can also just take a picture (in the camera) and send it to yourself. Save the picture, unlock the phone, and you should be back at the home screen. You could even send a video if you'd like. If none of the above work, I would suggest posting a bug report using the Android reporting framework. While it's not the best method, it does allow you to send a bug report to their team, so hopefully they'll look at it and eventually fix it. Erik (surname)

YouTube drama-comedian Matt Farah is pulling a late-night comic prank on Donald Trump, telling the president that he is "no more fun than a Mexican." Footage of Farah's conversation with the real-life president appeared on the former Daily Show writer's Instagram page. Mr Trump appears to suggest to the actor that he could have a presidential pardon if he writes a comedy show about him. "I'd be willing to do it," said Mr Trump. "You'd do a good job. I mean, you'd be so good. "But you'd be a little fun too. 'No more fun than a Mexican' - that's how I would say." The two then launch into an impromptu rendition of the Mr Trump impersonation from the sketch comedy show Saturday Night Live. Farah (Real Matt Farah) with Donald Trump Farah ended his performance with a promise to the American leader: "Matt Farah will be your friend." A portion of the original conversation is available to watch on Farah's Instagram page. A representative for the actor and comedian told CNN on Monday: "The video is absurd, and was meant to be. "It isn't a serious conversation and is clearly meant to be satirical, and in no way an endorsement of our current president, only a parody." Farah, who hosts the weekly "Matt and Sid" podcast, has been vocal in his support for Hillary Clinton's failed presidential campaign. He has also defended members of the UK's student Unite Against Fascism and blamed Mr Trump's victory on "a politically liberal but otherwise neutral London nightclub audience". On Sunday, in the US, Farah described the country's election result as "very sad" and "bizarre". "Very sad what's happened to America. It seems to be an election of friends, not policy," Farah said in a post on Instagram. "Pretty bizarre," he added, before urging his followers to "stay strong" and "stay progressive". Farah told fans that he plans to move to New York "because of the weather". "It's not a political thing," he said, adding that he "might" start another podcast.package org.yinan.piano.view; import android.content.Context; import android.util.AttributeSet; import
