Can someone give a basic example of how to implement CRUD operations in Backbone.js, specifically after a collection has been returned from a find? For example: db.find({ 'x' : 1 }).populate('y', 'z').fetch({ success: function() { // ok, this is the data I want. but what am I doing with it?? }} or db.find({ 'x' : 1 }).populate('y', 'z').one({ success: function(data) { // ok, this is the data I want. what should I do with it?? }} Can someone give an example? I understand Backbone has an isModified method, but I need to actually modify this data. As opposed to just telling it that some information has changed and recomputing it on the next fetch. Thanks! A: If you're using Backbone.Collection, to have the update happen instantly, you should change the model that "holds" the data. To simply change "this" data, Backbone will do that for you. You can't directly change the data stored on Backbone.Model. First, I would create a new model that holds the additional data. Let's say we need a new model "ThingsModel". One that holds a name, a description, and a collection of things. To look like some data var something = new ThingsModel({ name: "Jack Spade", description: "Spades are cool", things: [] }); To have the collection of things with jack spades var something = new ThingsModel({ name: "Jack Spade", description: "Spades are cool",
