A small, fast and easy to use program to collect the right information at the right time. Horizontal and vertical eye movements in a patient with communicating hydrocephalus. We describe a 34-year-old woman with communicating hydrocephalus. The patient had congenital hydrocephalus and had undergone a shunting procedure 4 years previously. Preoperatively, when the shunt was disconnected, left sided motor seizures were observed after cerebrospinal fluid (CSF) leakage. During the postoperative period, the patient underwent a shunt change and her seizures disappeared. The preoperative horizontal and vertical eye position was examined by the magnetic search coil technique. The horizontal OKN response disappeared after shunting and then reappeared after shunt change. The vertical OKN response remained consistent, even after CSF removal. The results from this case indicate that the horizontal and vertical OKN response may be interrupted in the postoperative period. An abnormal oculomotor response may be one of the signs of communicating hydrocephalus. Are we at a tipping point in primary care? There is increasing concern that current trends in managed care will limit the scope of general practice, particularly in light of the shift in public opinion to favour more decentralized care. The increasing cost-containment pressures of managed care may threaten the traditional alliance between primary care and community care. Such a threat is particularly worrisome since primary care is a relatively low-cost, community-based, preventive, and comprehensive service. Primary care, however, will not be affected significantly by the current disenchantment with managed care. Managed care will be manifested as modifications of existing primary care practices, not as an outright rejection of general practice. The dilemma facing the primary care movement is that the current economic environment provides little incentive to encourage more efficient utilization of medical resources. To meet this challenge, generalists must begin to practice in a professional, cost-conscious manner. The focus of primary care practice, the preventive role and function of primary care, must be revitalized and re-expanded.

Q: Defining and referencing a local variable in Django templates I'm writing an article template in django, and attempting to come up with a way to track how many times an object has been referenced. Let's say my template looks like this: `{% for object in objects %} {{ object.color }} {% if forloop.counter|divisibleby:3 %}`

It is a small utility that quickly takes up the large space on your desktop, allowing you to quickly access frequently used information without having to open several different pages. A small program that does more When activated, MiTeC InfoBar quickly expands to occupy whatever space you choose it. Once it is open, it quickly adds a newsfeed bar, displaying all the day's events. You can even use the program to quickly access both calendar dates and the cosmic events that occur in your area. To do this, launch MiTeC InfoBar and click the tool on the top right-hand corner. The calendar is displayed with scrolling events. When you open it, click on the up or down arrows in the top left-hand corner, letting you scroll through a set of events that have not yet been displayed. After it is open, the calendar will display the date. However, it only shows the day and week number, but not the month. The full month can be viewed by clicking on the top right-hand corner and selecting a month from the drop-down menu. Search the web Once the calendar is open, you can perform a quick search online via MiTeC InfoBar's search bar on the top right-hand corner. Simply enter the search term you are looking for, along with a space, and hit the enter button. The results will be displayed, allowing you to view the search results you wish to access. To close out, simply close the application. Turn off your PC Aside from news and calendar, the tool can also give you an up-to-date forecast of weather. To obtain this, click on the top right-hand corner and enter the city that interests you. The forecast will be displayed in an icon at the top of the application, showing the day and next forecasted day as well as the wind direction.
