* • Raster Editing: Replicates what you would see in a photocopier by building images with pixels. Photoshop is based on raster editing. * • Layer Editing: Has layers, unlike raster editing where you work on pixels, pixel by pixel. Used for creating and manipulating images. * • Gradient: Allows you to create a color gradient. You can create a straight or curved gradient. You can also set the colors, spread, and angle for the gradient. * • Fill: Ensures the artwork is filled in with a solid color. * • Text: Allows you to add text, size, color, and position. It's perfect for adding titles, captions, and legends to images. * • Add-ons: Allows you to enhance your images. It includes clone stamping (where you extract portions of an image and duplicate), making an image look scanned, removing red-eye, moving objects, making images larger, and others. When using Photoshop, you won't see much in the way of menus. Instead, the tools for your work are visually placed in panels. Many panels contain a limited selection of tools. To create the tools you need, it's best to go to the panel's attributes and click the options. The easiest way to use Photoshop is to follow your work through the layers. This allows you to make changes through layers, creating different styles through the process. Layers give you the most control over the parts of your image. The basic Photoshop operation consists of the following steps: 1. Choose a preset from the New menu. Choose one of the preset options to take you through the process and save you time when editing your images. You can choose the White Balance preset or use the Profile option, Highlights, or Exposure preset. (See Book III, Chapters – to start with the Presets dialog box for more information.) 2. Choose an option from the Tool Options buttons and drag your selection onto the image. Use the Brush tool to paint on your image, using the options you selected in Step 1. 3. If you made changes to your image, press Save to store your current image or press the Enter/Return key to save the image.

Ye's team plans to solve the study in two phases using a combination of theory and experiment. In the first phase, they will build an optical system to measure the changes in form and height of the uppermost capillary cells from the crystalline lens to the cornea. In the second phase, the team will seek to understand the structure-function relationship between these cells and the lens by varying the thickness and width of the capillary cells. The research will be a collaboration among the SMU engineering and biomedical engineering departments, as well as the Rhines Research Center. "We have a very interesting idea to look at these cells and their function, since it's very unusual to find cells in the lens itself," Shearer says. "This study is on cells that are normally found in the eye but rarely observed in lens biology. So the impact of this research is quite significant." In addition to understanding the role of these cells, the team says their work will reveal the behavior of cells during lens aging and cataracts. The team says future work on the project will explore the role of these cells in lens aging. "These capillary cells are responsible for the lens' accommodation ability, which is required for focusing the eye," Koh says. "This study will provide an important basis for further investigation of the etiology of cataracts and the design of cataract surgery." The research team says they will be developing this project over the next five years, during which time they hope to obtain the necessary startup funds to continue their work. The research has attracted the attention of the National Institutes of Health, which also supports SMU's Harvey Mudd College in its outreach programs. SMU's Rhines Research Center (in Dallas, also conducts research in medical imaging and image-guided surgery. Several local companies and organizations have expressed interest in Shearer's research and her proposed product. "The team's research agenda is extremely ambitious, and the technology they will develop from this work is novel," says David Roth, director of the Center for Molecular Modeling and Bioimaging at the University of California-San Diego ("I'm excited to see this work continue at SMU." The research results also could have an impact beyond medical applications. "There is a

What's New In?

Molecular analysis of three Fusarium verticilloides and F. verticillioides isolates. A molecular analysis of three Fusarium verticilloides and F. verticillioides isolates from Japanese cedar (Cryptomeria japonica) was performed. The pathogenicity test for cedar wood blocks on 2-year-old Japanese cedar seedlings in a greenhouse yielded 4/25 (16%) infected seedlings. However, all infected seedlings inoculated with a culture of one of three isolates of F. verticilloides or F. verticillioides exhibited distinct symptom-forming lesions on new growth. Based on DNA sequence analysis of a portion of the translation elongation factor (EF)-1-alpha gene, two of the isolates were identified as F. verticilloides. The third isolate was identified by the internal transcribed spacer regions and 5.8S rDNA sequence as F. verticillioides. question about a gun, a knife, a taser, and the type of wire used by the Bush family in the closet on Gore's office desk at the Alamo in 2000, and the suggestive nature of it was telling, and I also remembered a time not long ago when someone asked me if what someone said on TV actually happened. 9. That said, the evidence was extraordinary, the media coverage was on-the-level of an election, and everyone who asked the questions got so much back from the investigation -- and from the guy's ex wife, and the guy's own book -- that it was clear the guy was lying. A few days later, before the election, I received a note about a visit from the FBI, with the pre-printed message: "There is a matter pending before the Department of Justice. Please do not speak to the media about it." The day after the election, I got a call from a prominent member of the Bush campaign staff telling me there had been a threat, and he could not tell me if it was against Bush or himself, but he sure would like me to write a safe-word. I wrote to the FBI and asked if they would tell me the details, and I never heard from them again. When the news broke a few days later, I found out from the FBI. 10. I am no fan of torture, but I think there is one thing the FBI can do, which they did on one occasion
