that is the first englishProtein kinase C activation in the rat paraventricular nucleus is necessary for inducing fever. The cAMP-dependent protein kinase (PKA) and the cAMP-independent protein kinase C (PKC) are known to play important roles in the regulation of biological functions including fever. The paraventricular nucleus (PVN) is a key site regulating autonomic function and it is known that the release of catecholamines and corticotropin-releasing factor (CRF) in this nucleus is responsible for the induction of fever. The role of the PKA and PKC in catecholamine and CRF release in the PVN has been investigated. The data indicate that the PKA is involved in the release of catecholamines in the PVN in response to either lipopolysaccharide (LPS) or in combination with 1alpha,25-dihydroxy-vitamin D3, but is not involved in the release of CRF. The PKC is not involved in the release of CRF, but it is involved in the release of catecholamines in response to LPS. The present data indicate that the stimulation of either the PKA or PKC is sufficient to induce fever in the rat. However, when the two kinases are simultaneously activated, the fever response is
