1,25-Dihydroxyvitamin D3 and 24,25-Dihydroxyvitamin D3 modulate RANKL-induced osteoclast differentiation and function via interference with c-fos, c-Src and c-Fos-related antigen. The possible effects of 1,25-dihydroxyvitamin D3 [1,25(OH)2D3] and 24,25-dihydroxyvitamin D3 [24,25(OH)2D3] on RANKL-mediated osteoclastogenesis were assessed using mouse RAW264.7 monocyte/macrophage-like cells and osteoclast precursor cells. Because the nuclear receptor RANK controls the differentiation of osteoclast precursors, we evaluated the effect of 1,25(OH)2D3 and 24,25(OH)2D3 on RANKL-induced c-fos and c-Src expression and NFATc1, a master transcriptional regulator of osteoclastogenesis. When compared to controls, 1,25(OH)2D3 and 24,25(OH)2D3 significantly inhibited RANKL-induced c-fos and c-Src expression and NFATc1 in RAW264.7 cells. Moreover, in mouse osteoclast precursors, 1,25(OH)2D3 and 24,25(OH)2D3 also reduced RANKL-induced c-fos and c-Src expression and NFATc1. We also investigated the effect of 1,25(OH)2D3 and 24,25(OH)2D3 on osteoclast-mediated bone resorption, using multinucleated osteoclast-like cells obtained from osteoclast precursors cultured in the presence of 1,25(OH)2D3, 24,25(OH)2D3 or both. Both compounds significantly decreased the number of bone resorption pits on dentin slices. In addition, 1,25(OH)2D3 and 24,25(OH)2D3 increased the number of mononuclear preosteoclast-like cells and the expression of tartrate-resistant acid phosphatase in osteoclast precursors. Our results suggest that 1,25(OH)2D3 and 24,25(OH)2D3 inhibit RANKL-mediated oste

[Wrist hyperthermia in a case of multiple sclerosis]. The authors report a case of multiple sclerosis with wrist hyperthermia, and describe the treatment and follow-up to the present. In multiple sclerosis hypoxic hypoperfusion of the central nervous system with focal hypometabolism of its demyelinated areas has been described. Wrist hyperthermia has been considered as a characteristic sign of a motor disturbance in this disease. Skin temperature was measured by infrared thermometry in a 28-year-old patient. The neurologist recorded an increase in temperature with motor, sensory, and co-ordination disturbances. The symptoms deteriorated with sedation and improvement with treatment of Parkinsonism. The patient was treated with dantrolene 0.5 g orally at night and at bedtime with good results for 10 days.Q: RegEx: How to match a string only if it contains digits only if not in brackets I'm looking for a RegEx on a text input, which looks at the brackets and if the text inside is numeric, the RegEx should only return numbers in a text. So it should only check for digits with the brackets on the left and right side, like so: 123456 = 111223456 1234567890123 = 1112234567890123 It should return the numbers inside. That's what I have so far: `^\d+\s/gmi` The only thing I did is matching the number itself, but it is possible that my string has different characters in the brackets so that it is also matched. A: I think that this RegEx solves your problem: `/(?Q: get a reference to another scope in AngularJS I would like to get a reference to a child scope in an app block, so that it can be called from a parent controller.
