Among Bain's three elements of inspiration are the presence of challenging questions that "create the space for people to create their own solutions," the use of language that reflects humanity's ability to learn and grow, and a mindset that celebrates "creative destruction." In a companion piece to Bain's 2017 book on this theme, Entrepreneurial Creativity, the authors challenge the status quo in a variety of fields, from the U.S. military to the Supreme Court, to consider new ways of thinking in order to devise more fulfilling professional relationships. —Rene ReinholdShort-term in-patient for students in rural New South Wales: a pilot study.
