The first FIFA game to use motion capture data from real-life players was FIFA 15 (PlayStation 3) in 2014. FIFA 19 Ultimate Team introduced the “Motion Field” feature which uses the data from motion capture suits in Ultimate Team modes. You can view and compare how the motions are captured through footage in our Motion capture section of the FIFA 19 news hub. Recently, the motion capture suit that FIFA 19, FIFA 20 and FIFA 21 use was changed to Vicon V.I.TEK T-100. Details on the new suit can be seen here. Gameplay Improvements Ball Control The ball control system in FIFA 22 has been completely rebuilt with more realistic ball physics. On the pitch the ball feels very dynamic, responsive and fluid. Playing matches with the ball control system on has really strengthened the connection between the players and the ball. FIFA 22 has been enhanced with new touches that add an extra element of entertainment. Players with a simple touch can dictate the pace of the game, and new (and more realistic) levels of pass weight allow the ball to slip between player’s legs, while quick touches can slide the ball through their defences. FIFA 22’s ball physics give players more options in the creation of real-time attacking movements. Players can now use their feet to force the ball around defenders, slide touches and quickly break away. Added touches mean that players can work more effectively with their team and opponents, and with more dynamic ball control, the game world feels more connected. Dribbling Dribbling has been enhanced and players can now create a wider variety of movements and dummies with more control. The new dribbling controls allow players to use the left stick to control the direction of the right stick, allowing players to dribble with every part of their body in a smoother and more realistic way. They will have access to new dribbling moves like slides, sharp turns and quick touches, when done in combination with new player movement. Breakaway Effective use of the left stick when performing player movements has been made even more important with the addition of new breakaway skills. These include what FIFA 22 calls ‘Power Curls,’ which are quick jumps and swerves, to create new attack options. As well as making breakaways more effective, the new grab system allows
