HyperMotion Technology Here are a few examples of how this new technology can be applied to FIFA 22: Ball Physics FIFA 22 reflects the diversity of international football in the new Ball Physics system. Players with a high dribbling skill receive a greater ball spin and faster bounce to put opposing defenses off-balance. Ball Physics in FIFA 22 Defenders can now decide whether to intercept the ball with one of the new Intercept view options. For example, a player can choose the Intercept Optimal and Compensate options to gain more time to adjust to a pass and recover their balance. In addition, the quality of shots from distance is now dependent on the angle of impact. The Hit Square Gameplay Improvement System (GSGIS) – a new calculation method that assesses the angle of impact and the force of a shot, used to improve directional accuracy – is now based on player movement data (excluding goal kicks and throws) to give players more control in the shooting department. Ball Physics effects Shots Passing With the new Touchlines system, players now have more space to move and deliver passes. Passers can now choose to look up at a specific touchline when delivering a ball and even choose their own position within a team's defensive or offensive third. In addition, the new Physical Play System (PPS) now features a new Handoff Automation System (HAS), which allows for a more natural and accurate passing style. FIFA 22's PPS features Striker Controls With the new Front to Back (FTB) system, defenders now have the option to press an attack button, depending on whether they are attacking or defending with the ball. FTB system in FIFA 22 FIFA 22 introduces a new Artificial Intelligence (AI) system known as the "Offside Intelligence," which gives players the option to communicate to their team mates that they are offside. The system also allows goalkeepers to communicate their decision to take a clean save. This will now be made available in all match types. Offside Intelligence in FIFA 22 FIFA 22 introduces a new Player Communication system. Using the new Team Round Cue System (TRCS) players can now call their teammates for support, locate their teammates on the pitch and communicate between players in a variety of ways. Player Communication in FIFA 22
