Privacy Policy: on histamine release from human neutrophils and macrophages induced by polymorphonuclear leukocytes in the presence of monocyte-derived conditioned medium. Conditioned medium (CM) of peripheral blood monocytes was obtained by culturing the monocytes in serum-free RPMI 1640 supplemented with only 0.5% bovine serum albumin (BSA) for 72 h in the presence of 10% autologous serum. The histamine release from human polymorphonuclear leukocytes (PMNs) stimulated with three different antigens was significantly inhibited by adding CM in a dose-dependent manner. Antigens included E. coli lipopolysaccharide (LPS), sheep red blood cells (SRBC), and soluble tetanus toxoid. Addition of histamine releasing factor (HRF) to PMNs caused a prompt and transient histamine release. The profiles of histamine release from PMNs stimulated with E. coli LPS, SRBC and soluble tetanus toxoid in the presence of CM and HRF were almost the same as those stimulated in the absence of CM and HRF. Macrophages were prepared from the monocyte fraction of PBMC of volunteers. Histamine release from macrophages stimulated with E. coli LPS or SRBC in the presence of CM was not inhibited at all. These results suggest that HRF released from monocytes may be one of the possible mediators of histamine release from PMNs and macrophages. The mechanism underlying histamine release from human PMNs and macrophages stimulated with soluble antigens is discussed.
