1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a printer, and, more particularly, to a printer which forms a pair of image signals on a pair of printing sheets with a pair of printing units. 2. Description of the Related Art In conventional printers, which include a plurality of printing units, a problem exists in that it is difficult to precisely correct, to a certain degree, a defective sheet among the printing sheets printed by the plurality of the printing units. The conventional printers include a defective sheet recovering unit for correcting the defective sheet. However, the defective sheet recovering unit is complicated in structure, large in size, and high in cost, because it needs a complex control. In view of the foregoing, it is therefore an object of the present invention to provide a printer in which a defective sheet can be corrected to a certain degree with a simplified structure. In achieving the above-mentioned and other objects, according to one aspect of the present invention, there is provided a printer including a printing unit for forming a first image on a first printing sheet, a printing unit for forming a second image on a second printing sheet, and a plurality of registration rollers for successively delivering the first and second printing sheets one by one along a sheet conveying path. The printer further includes image information acquisition means for acquiring image information representing the first and second images; transport control means for controlling the plurality of the registration rollers to control the first and second printing sheets to be delivered to the sheet conveying path; correcting means for correcting, based on the image information acquired by the image information acquisition means, the first and second printing sheets delivered to the sheet conveying path; and image information transmission means for transmitting the image information acquired by the image information acquisition means to the correcting means in case of a normal operation. In a normal operation mode, the image information acquisition means acquires the image information, and the transporting means controls the plurality of the registration rollers based on the image information. The correcting means corrects the first and second printing sheets based on the acquired image information and delivers the corrected printing sheets. The image information transmission means transmits the image information to the correcting means, if the correcting means has detected a defective sheet, in case of a service call-out mode. In a service call-out mode, the correcting means corrects the defective sheet to a certain degree based on the image information acquired by the image information acquisition means, and transmits the corrected defective sheet to the image information transmission means

International Herald Tribune The International Herald Tribune is a Canadian newspaper and the English-language weekly newspaper of record for international news for foreign markets. The paper was established in 1961 by the International News Service (INS), but was absorbed by the United Press International in 1968. In 1982, United Press sold the paper to The Thomson Corporation, which in turn sold the paper to Thomson Newspapers in 2006. The Canadian Heritage Information Network now distributes the International Herald Tribune through its Presse.gc.ca news website. The IHT is based in Toronto, Ontario, and is published weekly. In 2016, the French version of the newspaper made headlines when the paper began mentioning the number of shot in the Syrian civil war in the headline. History The paper was established in 1961 by the International News Service (INS), with support from United Press International (UPI). At the time, INS had a full-time staff of about 80 editors, reporters and photographers in 36 cities worldwide. Its reportorial focus was North America, the European Union and the Middle East. The first edition of the IHT was printed on March 15, 1961. It was based in New York City. In 1968, UPI sold INS to United Press International, now known as United Press International, (UPI). As the UPI was a news cooperative, its stock, United Press, was owned by the UPI's member companies, each of which was a separate corporation. This gave each UPI member company control of the paper it paid for. The UPI and INS attempted to combine the two papers. But INS and UPI were too large for each other, and the merger never happened. Meanwhile, INS had been growing, and its new editor was none other than Leonard Downie. Downie set about subverting the INS's American conservatism, toning down the paper's pro-American stance, and focusing more on "the all-pervasive tyranny of the Kremlin" (as he called it), and the lack of press freedom in Communist countries. He also started charging for INS's foreign subscribers, thus breaking with his old firm, United Press, and INS's old boss, Henry F. Grady. In 1976, the UPI's stock price dropped, and, as a result, United Press began to cut back on IHT staff, eventually bringing it down to a staff of only 30. The editorial page was also somewhat liberalized. But the paper was still profitable.
