Q: Is it possible to set a path to the parent directory of a bundle in Mac OS X? I'd like to know if it is possible to set the directory to which the .app file is being placed when running the app. My original hope was to just add some type of entry to the .plist file of the application bundle (just as you'd add it in .rb files). I'd like to be able to change the location of the bundle on-the-fly, without having to re-compile and re-architecture. I'd also like to be able to switch the app over to a different directory without having to change the entry in the plist. Is this possible, and if so, how would you do it? I need to be able to do this in Mac OS X 10.4 or 10.5.

A: There is the install location parameter in the "info.plist" file of an application. See here. Using this you can set the install directory of a bundle. As a side effect, by default the .app bundle is placed in the "Contents" subdirectory of the install directory of the app. This is the same directory you can see on Finder. But be careful when you change directories in Finder. Make sure that you switch back to the application and then the bundle will be in the correct directory.

A: I think NSHipster has the solution here:
`NSWorkspace *workspace = [NSWorkspace sharedWorkspace]; NSString *appPath = [workspace desktopFilename]; // This assumes that this is a Mac OS X application. If it is a Linux application, substitute "home" for "desktop". NSURL *appURL = [NSURL fileURLWithPath:appPath];` As a side-
